Graduates of the Bachelor of Science in Military Leadership will be able to:

1. Differentiate and explain the application of military leadership in full spectrum operations such as counterinsurgency, major combat, and operations other than war throughout history and from various perspectives.
2. Discuss the importance of history and politics, cultural understanding, diplomacy, global economy, and national security strategies to the success or failure of military operations.
3. Identify and explain the ethical dilemmas that military leaders may struggle with and how they can be analyzed, evaluated, and resolved.
4. Analyze characteristics and leadership traits of individuals within large, complex, and crisis-laden environments on and off the battlefield that contribute to the individual leader's success in meeting the demands of the evolving global-geo-political environment.
5. Assess military leadership during conflict and peace-time operations.
6. Analyze and apply leadership lessons learned from military operations throughout history and in different scenarios to contemporary real-world situations.
